THE NEW NORMAL

The past two years have brought significant changes to how laboratories are designed, built and managed. From technology to people to the environment, the term “normal” doesn’t always reflect everyone’s normal. Creativity and innovation are pushing solutions out of their boxes and the 2022 Sustainable Laboratory Conference is your opportunity to share, and showcase, your “New Normal” with the Canadian laboratory community.

HERE ARE EXAMPLES OF QUESTIONS THAT WE WOULD LIKE TO SEE ANSWERED, FROM MULTIPLE PERSPECTIVES (DESIGNER, OPERATOR, OWNER), AS PART OF THE CONFERENCE PROGRAM:

- Has lab planning changed moving forward?
- Has lab planning evolved based on new client expectations?
- Has IOT become common place in Laboratories? Should it?
- What does integrated design mean today?
- How are we building reconciliation in developing new facilities?
- Are supply-chain issues the new normal and how can you mitigate their risks?
- How will the ‘remote workplace’ be built into the laboratory working environment?
- How can facility design support the recruitment and retention of talent?
- How are companies attracting and retaining the talents?
- How can industry and universities support each other to grow the research sector?
- How are you engaging local communities and tapping into their region-specific expertise?
- What are the new design challenges associated with project resilience?
- How can lab facilities respond to environmental disasters?
- How can the facility protect the staff, research and building during emergency events?
- What is a resilient lab of the future?
